Storyboard - Mobile Review

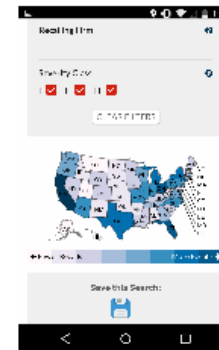

Tracy is a 20 year-old college student in Texas. Between classes, extracurriculars, and her social life, she's always on the go, and relies on her smart phone and tablet to keep her current. Tracy spends a lot of her time on her smart phone checking in on the latest social media apps, which help her stay in touch with friends and family, including her mom, Marilyn, with whom she's close.

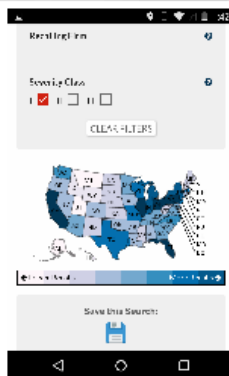

In between classes, Tracy sees that she got an email from the FDA Recalls site sent by her mom.

After reading the email, she clicks on the link to see what her mom sent. It's something about salmonella-related food recalls in Texas...

The link opens her phone's browser, and takes her to the site. Even on a smart phone, the site is still easy to read and get information from.

Tracy looks at the number of recalls, and notices that some of them are low severity labeling recalls. She decides to change the filter to only show the most severe recalls by de-selecting the two lowest severity categories.

Reason for recall:
This product is being voluntarily recalled by the manufacturer due to....

The site updates the table, and Tracy clicks on each of the recall events to get more detail. Tracy sees that one of the products is one that she eats all the time.

Tracy saves her updated search and posts it to Twitter to let her friends know to be careful with the product.
